

Roman Villa Museum

In the non-urban country of Somerset in England, the excavation of the fourth-century Roman Villa Ventorum is the basis for a new cultural experience: the Roman Villa Museum. Most of the remains of the villa are still underground. Only a small part has been excavated and can be admired at the museum. At the Roman Villa Museum, visitors will discover what life was like for a Roman in Britain 1600 years ago compared to today.

Bruns realised three exhibits – Lifestyle, People and Gods – according to Kossmanndejong's design in an extremely short lead time. The exhibits constructed from Corian were developed and produced entirely in-house. Through audio stories and interactive games, visitors will discover how Romans worked, lived, spoke law and gambled. See-throughs and viewing houses invite to discover the information for yourself.

The Villa is unique in the world, because of its built entirely with authentic materials techniques. It is a special place where visitors can really put themselves in the shoes of the Romans.
